

Verge

Like Truth or Dare.
Just way, way better.

Verge is a group card game that grows naturally from playful to intimate. One smartphone in the middle guides the game. The other phones are only used briefly so everyone can set their own preferences. What makes Verge special is its three-layer consent system: it makes sure only tasks everyone involved is comfortable with come up. So nobody has to say no in public, but anyone can at any time.

5 phases, from Playful to Uninhibited

platonic			intimate
Playful	Personal	Close	Intimate	Uninhibited
Warming up and laughing.	Honest and open	Depth and platonic touch	Kissing and intimate touch	Nudity and no inhibitions

"We played it at a party and everyone loved it. Better than any other app of its kind, by far."

LENNYYY S.

"You can set consent limits separately for every other player, without having to say them out loud."

LILLE-BEE

"Whether it's with friends or on a first date, there are the right cards for every occasion."

What sets Verge apart?

The problem

In most group games, the questions are boring, inappropriate or unimaginative. Often it ends up just being about drinking more to loosen up. That can quickly lead to peer pressure and crossed boundaries. In moments like that, saying “Stop!” is especially hard for a lot of people.

The solution

Everyone privately sets how far they want to go with each other person.

The lowest limit always decides.

You never have to say no out loud. You don’t have to explain anything. You set your slider and the app does the rest.

Private. Nobody sees what anyone else sets.

Two game modes

The full game

Everyone sets their own limits towards everyone else, individually, on their own phone. All 5 phases available.

Playful | Personal | Close | Intimate | Uninhibited

Verge Friends

Only 1 phone needed. Add names, set personal limits and go. Capped at the Close phase, because individual limits between specific people aren’t possible here.

Playful | Personal | Close

Who is Verge for?

Verge is for couples, friends, acquaintances and people who are just getting to know each other. Verge works in a flatshare, in the bedroom, in a bar and at parties. And Verge isn’t only for the sex-positive community or kinky parties. With a wink and original cards, Verge makes for unforgettable nights with any group, however far that group wants to go together.

Collaboration

Verge is looking for people to collaborate with who share our values: consent, warmth, chaos with style. And the belief that real connection is the most intimate thing that can happen between people.

Who are we?

We're a photographer and a chef from Cologne, and at some point we realised there was no game that really fitted the nights we spend with our friends. So we built Verge.
